

american institute for conservation

Preserving Cultural Heritage

A woman with blonde hair tied back, wearing a green apron over a grey shirt, is focused on her work in a laboratory or kitchen setting. She is using a small tool to work with a dark, granular substance, likely chocolate, in a white paper-lined tray. To her left, a clear glass dish contains more of the same substance. The background is slightly blurred, showing a white countertop and other lab equipment.

Are you an Emerging Conservation Professional? Join ECPN.

Emerging Conservation Professionals Network

Get involved through the ECPN member community for blog posts, discussion boards, and more!

www.culturalheritage.org/ecpn

Emerging Conservation Professionals Network

ECPN is a forum and network for those just learning about or entering the field of conservation, including undergraduates, pre-program individuals, graduate students, and early-career conservation professionals. We do this by:

- Developing targeted programming and resources to support emerging conservation professionals transitioning through early career stages.
- Connecting emerging conservation professionals with educational and professional development opportunities.
- Fostering communication between emerging and experienced conservation professionals.

American Institute for Conservation

202.452.9545
ecpn@culturalheritage.org

groups/ecpnetwork